Oops! I-Kooo!

HD 52 x 10 min

Things that adults take for granted can seem bewildering to little children who have not yet learned about them, as twenty-something Doh Remi finds out when her grandfather suddenly has her babysit six-year-old I-Kooo. But I-Kooo is no typical kid — he's actually a pea-headed prince from another planet. It's Remi's job to teach the royal visitor all about living on planet Earth, from electricity and fire safety, to good public manners and eating healthy food. Fortunately the talented Remi has help from I-Kooo's robot named BB, who disguises himself as a teddy bear, but contending with the stubborn I-Kooo's arrogance and mischief is a royal headache. <Oops! I-Kooo!> is a fun and engaging animated series for kids that is ideal for teaching them what they themselves need to know about the world around them.

Why?

Why?

26 x 5 min

Children are full of curiosity about the world around them. Any adult who spends time with kids knows the experience of being bombarded with endless questions of how?, why?, and what? as these young people try to figure out the world around them. It is for those inquisitive minds that <Why?> has been developed. Taking its name from the most common question kids ask, this series aimed at students from grades 1 through 6 imparts the foundations of science — and some of its fun secrets — in a way that is exciting and engaging. Stop-motion animation and 3D computer graphics make the subject matter anything but dull.

Go, Torara! Go!

HD 88 x 10 min

It seems that there are more models for bad manners than good, even if we want to teach our children how to be ethical young citizens. In his critter-populated town, Torara the hamster gets into all sorts of funny predicaments where he's a little confused about what to do as he tries to impress his sweetheart, Banbunny, steers clear of Danjugi the mischievous guinea pig, and hears advice from Mr Blub-blub the fish and Dalileon, the guinea pig who runs the local train station. Torara's mother is also there to nudge him in the right direction. These characters are depicted by actual animals, including a mouse and a hedgehog, living in a colorfully laid out town, all telling stories designed to build character and to get kids to think about how to treat others.
